“ I didn't know your mother but she must have been one heck of a lady. Knowing you were her daughter tells me alot about her. When you loose a parent I know its difficult but you will have alot of good memories that will help you through this period. Sorry I could'nt be there for you but my mobility is getting worse and I can't drive. Mac

“ Is That You?
by Robyn O'Rouke

Is That You?
The falling star in the night
So pure, so bright.

Is That You?
The breeze gently blowing through my hair
Telling me that you are still there.

Is That You?
The golden ball rising in the East
Bringing hope that a new day, the sorrow will ease.

Is That You?
Setting in the West
Bringing a night of peace and rest.

Is That You?
Who dries my tears
As I gaze towards my future woes.

Is That You?
That makes me smile at life's irony
That other people often cannot see.

Is That You?
That gives me strength to carry on
Even though you are gone.

Is That You?
Yes. It is you. You are with me always.

I will love you always and forever, Grandma! Godspeed to an eternal life of peace and joy with family and friends (even the four legged, furry) who will be exuberantly greeting you in heaven! with love and gratitude, Cathy

Hello Francine, Alan and family,

No matter how professed the sincerity, no matter how expressive, condolences always seem to be inadequate in relation to the significant personal loss you have experienced. But rest assured that the intentions of the wanderers out here, your many friends, your many acquaintances, are heartfelt and we truly wish you strength and courage in the face of your Mom's passing. And be assured that we pray and wonder at the process of life. And know that your Mom smiles down on you and is now in a place of wonder.
