“ *Ed,
Please accept my heartfelt condolence. Your father was truly a great man. He was full of life and I'm glad I had the opportunity to know him and share so many childhood memories with you and your father. Our thoughts and prayers are with you and your family.

“ Many bereaved ones have found that talking can be a helpful release. Notice, for example, the words of the Bible character Job, who suffered the loss of all ten of his children and endured other tragedies. He said: “My soul certainly feels a loathing toward my life. I will give vent to my concern about myself. I will speak in the bitterness of my soul!” (Job 1:2, 18, 19; 10:1) Notice that Job needed to “give vent” to his concerns. www.jw.org
