“ I will deeply miss my dear friend, Ed. Life was not always kind in recent years with all the health issues for him and Mary, but I could always count on his optimism and quick laugh to come through on the phone calls between Michigan and Texas. While he wasn't very good with words (except when talking about fishing or hunting, two of the great joys of his life), you could always count on Ed to tell you the truth. My last visit in person with him was over breakfast a couple years ago, where he proudly showed me photos of a trip to Alaska. He couldn't get over the beauty, marveling at God's creation. In recent years, he liked to talk with me about "the big guy Upstairs," who I think is probably getting an earful about some questions Ed has been wanting to ask for a long while. One of things that makes Heaven so alluring is that A River Runs Through It, as I understand. While I will miss Ed terribly, I know he's already staked out a place on the bank somewhere, smiling and laughing and waiting to tell others how good the fishing is. I regret that time and distance and other circumstances made changes to our relationship, but it never reduced the quality of our friendship and I believe it only deepened our love and appreciation for each other. He was a good man, and I am proud to have been considered his friend.
