“ Jesse was such a huge part of my formative years. He wasn't just a friend, he was like a brother to me. We were basketball starters together for six years. I was always his point guard, he was always my scoring forward. I'll always smile thinking about how we were each other's favorite teammates... sometimes just passing the ball back and forth, playing keep-away from everyone else like it was our own little game inside the game.

We spent so many nights at Tiger games, sitting in the $1 bleacher seats, so happy playing catch in between innings. I'll never forget being at the Lions game with our dads when Barry Sanders ran for over 2,000 yards. Moments that feel frozen in time now. Jesse had a way of making everything more fun. Sports, random hangouts, or getting the party started — he brought the energy every time.

He loved to dance, and we'd sing NSYNC at the top of our lungs together, fully aware neither of us had any talent. It never mattered. We laughed so hard, especially when our voices cracked, and somehow those were the moments that stuck the most.

Jesse was an incredible athlete, the kind who made every sport look easy, but what I'll carry with me most is the joy he brought into my life. We laughed constantly, making each other the butt of every joke, and we cried together, too. He showed up for me in ways that truly mattered, in ways you never forget.

Life took us in different directions after I moved away from Michigan, but Jesse will always be with me. He was essential to who I became, and he will forever be one of the brightest highlights of my youth. I'm so grateful I got to grow up alongside him.

Rest easy, my friend. You'll always have a piece of my heart.
