“ Thank you for the memories. You were a good friend when we were young and carefree. I'm sad to know our paths cannot cross to reminisce. Rest peacefully dear Becky.

“ Rebecca (Becky as I'm allowed to call her) has been a part of my life for over the past 35 years. She was my best friend. We met when we were doing volunteer work. As we grew older and our careers developed, she decided that she preferred to be called Rebecca, at least in her professional life. She told me that I could still call her Becky, since I knew her before she reached her mid-twenties.

Becky dedicated her life to helping others. She drew people to her with her understanding, kindness, caring, and innate ability to communicate with others. She gave dignity and respect to all. Becky has always been there for me. She helped me through difficult times and shared many happy times. I will miss her giggle and her perspective on life. She's the kind of friend that you could call having nothing specific to say and end up talking for hours. A few weeks ago, she talked with me about her illness. She said, "If I can't 'do' this, I don't want you to cry." Then she paused for a moment and said, "Well....it's okay to cry for a little while, but then I want you to be happy."

Well, my friend, I am going through that crying part right now, but I'll try to work on being happy. I miss you and I love you.
